“ Dad, its been over three weeks that you have been gone. It is still hard to process that you are no longer here on earth with us. It seems like yesterday we were in my kitchen, drinking a whole pot of coffee and cooking potatoes and eggs with a side of salsa; talking about the good old days. Lately, I have flashbacks of you singing in the shower and spraying one too many sprays of cologne and smelling up our hallway with your scents. Or driving you all over town to spend your check on anything the kids wanted. I wish I could have let you live with us forever; but I know that wasn't God's plan. I will always cherish that year you spent with us. I thank God every day that Sienna, Gabriel and Leah got to know a happy and healthy version of you. They loved you so much. When you would walk in from taking them to park or on bike rides, I secretly would reminiscence about all the times you use to take me and my brother and sisters out doing the same things. It was so beautiful seeing you be a Papa to them, you spoiled them so much and I'm sorry I had to stop you from giving them too much candy or sodas. I have been flooded with so many memories and it's been hard coming to the realization that you are gone. Thank you Daddy for being there when I was a baby and even taking me off the bottle, my graduation of preschool, giving me one hundred bucks for my 13th birthday, helping me with my first job as a newspaper deliver, helping me earn money for cheer leading, teaching me how to drive (though I nearly crashed us all into a block wall) buying me my first car, driving across country to see me in North Carolina with Denise, making that "Papa" apron for our first baby shower, showing up at our housewarming, walking me down the isle and living with us in Texas. You weren't perfect daddy but you were you and I wouldn't change that for anything in the world. I will miss you forever. Love you mucho
